In other words supposed as they were with an immense corruption fund they could not have done this. In controlling the purchasable vote, but it was the men not to be turned by the boodle argument that they "didn't do anything with." As long as it was a mere question of money the Democrats went along swimmingly, but when it came to argument and reason then they were unable to stem the tide. This plain statement of facts from the Democratic secretary is a bad black eye for the fraud howlers, who only to go out of business when their case has been given away. When the Non-partisan Committee of the Hundred called for subscribers for the fund to prevent fraud at the polls the Democratic Committee did not have a dollar to expend in that kind of work, but the Republican Committee promptly sent a check for the amount designated. The Democrats then had in eye to controlling the "floaters" which they succeeded in doing, but they did not reckon on the Democratic vest pocket vote for Harrison.

Field informed his congregation that at the expiration of the present parish year he should retire from the active duties of the minister, Mr. Field's feeling was confined to Bangor, but will extend over the state and throughout New England, the friends and admirers of the Reverend gentleman being legion. The reason for his wonderful hold upon the hearts of the people is not only found in the master mind that enables him to deal with the great moral problems of the day with a force and clearness that makes him a man marked among men, but in the deep and constant study of the absolute goodness of his every word and act. In the pulpit it is not only the same broad hearted, noble hearted fearless, devoted, self-sacrificing, always ready to take the purest and always true. Dr. Field has occupied the pulpit of the Third Parish for twenty-five years, and it is at the age of thirty and two that it is one for him to allow the labors and responsibilities of the pulpit to rest on his shoulders. Twice a day he wears a strain upon the physical and mental forces of a man, but at seventy we are sure that Dr. Field is a younger man than a good many men at fifty, and we hope that with the help of his private lighted
